

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.

WAVE BOWL

Surface waves occur in the upper layer of the ocean and usually result from wind. Some waves can travel thousands of miles before reaching land. Despite the great amount of energy produced by a wave, there is little actual forward motion of individual water particles in a wave.